PREFACE

THIS volume is intended as a companion to the Catalogue of Pictures and Drawings. Since the order of that catalogue is alphabetical, it has been considered desirable that the illustrations should follow the same order rather than be grouped under schools, as in the first edition. It is hoped that the greater ease of reference thereby achieved will more than compensate for an occasional awkwardness of apposition or lack of symmetry in the placing of some of the illustrations.

The present edition has been enlarged by the inclusion of some fifty more pictures.

THE WALLACE COLLECTION

The Collection was formed in the main by Richard, fourth Marquess of Hertford (1800–1870), but largely increased by his son, Sir Richard Wallace (1818–1890). A few objects, however, have been traced to the first and second Marquesses (1719–94 and 1743–1822), and a considerable number to the third (1777–1842).

The Collection takes its character from the tastes and opportunities of the fourth Marquess, who lived in Paris and was a devotee of the arts of France in the eighteenth century. Consequently this century, early and late, is richly represented in its painting and miniatures, sculpture, furniture and objects of art generally. But the body of French art extends in sculpture back to the thirteenth century, and forward, in painting, to the third quarter of the nineteenth.

Although the French section gives a distinctive character to Hertford House, it is only one among four. The second is a rich gallery of Italian and Spanish, Flemish, Dutch and English paintings. If the number of Primitives is small, the seventeenth century can be studied in Brouwer, van Dyck, Hals, de Hooch, Rembrandt, Rubens and Velazquez. The eighteenth century in Italy is represented by Guardi at his best, and among the English portraits are famous examples of Gainsborough, Hoppner, Reynolds and Romney. The nineteenth century gives us the largest existing collection of the works of Bonington, whose influence can be clearly seen in much contemporary French work.

The third section, chiefly acquired by Sir Richard Wallace, embraces mediæval objects, Italian Renaissance terra-cottas and bronzes, medals and plaquettes ; maiolica from Gubbio and Urbino, Hispano-Moresque and Turkish faience ; rock-crystal, glass, jewellery, gold and silversmiths' work, wax reliefs and much else.

Finally, there is the chief collection in this country of European Arms and Armour, which from its exceptional quality is becoming every day more precious as private collections are dispersed and absorbed in foreign museums : this, too, we owe to Sir Richard Wallace. Adjoining it is the Oriental Armoury, the work of the fourth Marquess.

The Collection was bequeathed to the nation by Lady Wallace (who died in 1897), and was first opened as a national museum in June, 1900, by Edward VII, then Prince of Wales.

Busts of the Founders, with other family portraits, are on exhibition in the Founders' Room.
